Focus Gallery Presents Nowhere to Go: The Haiti Housing Crisis
November 10-December 5 at the University of Florida
Special panel discussion, film screening and reception on Nov. 19

Gainesville, Fla., November 17, 2014 — University Galleries at the University of Florida (UF) is pleased to present Nowhere to Go: The Haiti Housing Crisis made possible by the UF International Center in conjunction with International Education Week. The exhibit, which is on display in Focus Gallery Nov. 10, 2014 through Dec. 5, 2014, is a multimedia look at the housing crisis that continues to affect Haiti nearly five years since a devastating earthquake.

This exhibit will provide the public with an on-the-ground perspective from Haiti, allowing them to learn about the problems that have forced Haitians “under tents.” Through a series of special events on Nov. 19, 2014, including a film screening, interactive photography exhibition and panel discussion, attendees will learn about pressing international issues including disaster aid, development and reconstruction.

The film, Mozayik, is the story of Augustin Mona and his fight against the forced eviction of his tent camp. When his camp falls through the cracks, Mona must navigate the maze of international organizations, government agencies and businesses trying to rebuild the country. In addition, the Self-Portrait Project (SPP) will provide an interactive photography exhibition. The SPP is a visual archive project, using a two-way mirror and a remote trigger to enable the user to take photos of him/herself. Working in collaboration with grassroots housing collectives in Haiti, the SPP visited displacement camps throughout Port-au-Prince and outlying areas, allowing residents to take self-portraits. The project puts a face on the Haiti housing crisis, pressuring governments and organizations to address the issue from the community perspective.
