Course description and topic:

This Creative Photography course will explore the unique technical and aesthetic capabilities of the large format film view camera, primarily utilizing 4x5" color and/or black and white sheet film as a capture medium. Students will acquire skills required to produce compelling and considered images using this age-old workflow. The loading of film, handling, processing, printing, and storage of these uniquely physical manifestations of the imaging process will be discussed early in the program. You will then be assigned 4 primary projects to be produced using the view camera kits available to you for check-out. These assignments will be selected to illustrate to the instructor your technical and creative mastery of the large format equipment available to you. These assignments will be group critiqued, and active participation is required. We will spend class time in demonstrations of the cameras and associated accessories included in the kits-including hand-held light meters, studio lighting, and film processing and printing in the darkroom. After you have become comfortable with the view camera, we will explore some of the advanced features which, ironically, make the view camera at once one of the most primitive, and yet highly advanced still image making device ever created. We will also consider some different options, and associated work-flows necessary for predictable outputting of prints from the negatives (and/or transparencies) you create: straight silver, darkroom produced enlargements or scanned film-to-digital and print on a large format Epson inkjet printer.

Course objectives and goals:

The successful completion of this course should provide valuable insights into both the practical aspects of operating a completely manual film camera, processing and printing the resulting images, as well as an appreciation of the historical and creative foundation upon which the state of the art digital photography rests. You will learn to use a medium format camera to acquire your exposure and processing skills, then advance to the "movements" of the imaging elements of the view camera to achieve pictorial effects generally unavailable to the users of more conventional cameras. You should also discover the challenges and pleasures of working with large and bulky, very mechanical cameras, with limited capture materials (2 sheets of film to each pre-loaded holder), external manual light metering, and the mastery of your photographic skills to determine correct exposure. This will require that you take a much more contemplative approach to photography than that to which you may have become accustomed. Images that you create should exploit the unique capabilities of this system, both technically and creatively. While this is a technical class by necessity, a large part of your evaluation will be image-based. I expect you to illustrate your technical mastery of the medium, while producing compelling photographs that can withstand critical analysis. You will be required to discuss your personal aesthetic in relation to the work you produce, and your participation in all of the class reviews will be considered in your final grade.

Grading and Evaluation (student requirements):

- Each student will be given a series of four major assignments and will receive an individual grade for work and research completed for each assignment. All requirements for the assignments will be outlined by the instructor. The topic for each assignment will be introduced by the instructor. Students will present work in progress during course meetings and completed work during schedule group critique dates, which will be approximately every 3 or 4 weeks. Students will present documentation of research on assigned dates. Students will refer to their individual research when presenting work during critiques and group discussions.
- Students taking this course are required to conduct visual and conceptual research relevant to the topics of the assignments of the course. This will require that each student do reading and visual research, conducting a significant amount of work outside of class. The instructor will assist each student's preparation for research. Students must provide organized documentation of this visual research during each of their four presentations to the group.
- All work handed in for this course is to be new, original work completed by the student. Previous work completed in other photography courses may not be submitted in this class. Further, the work completed for this course must be in relation to the course topics under investigation.
- Student grades will be determined by the quality and development of their visual work and their ability to meet the requirements listed above.

Attendance Policy:
